

SPRING SALE | 3 FREE MONTHS

A pilot who hitched a ride on a Lion Air 737 saved that plane. The next day, the...

How one of the most noticeable Lakers season-ticket holders is happy wit...

Wealthy parents in admissions sc... intense pressu >

L.A. NOW LOCAL

College admissions scandal: Wealthy parents told to make deal or face more charges

By RICHARD WINTON
MAR 19, 2019 | 2:05 PM

Clockwise from top left: J. Mossimo Giannulli and Lori Loughlin; William "Rick" Singer; Felicity Huffman; Yale women's soccer coach Rudy Meredith; former Stanford sailing coach John Vandemoer; USC water polo coach Jovan Vavic. (EPA/Shutterstock; Associated Press; Getty Images; Los Angeles Times)

Federal prosecutors are seeking potential deals with some of the wealthy parents charged in the sweeping college admissions scandal as investigators continue to broaden the case, according to multiple sources with knowledge of the situation.

One source said some of the parents are being given a short window to consider a deal or potentially face additional charges.

It's unclear which parents prosecutors hope to seek out for cooperation, but sources said authorities were interested in getting a better picture of how the scam worked.

The sources requested anonymity because they were not authorized to speak publicly on the matter.

The push for deals offers hints as to where the case that has rocked American academia is headed.

Federal authorities have said the investigation is ongoing but have not provided details.

Several elite Southern California prep schools have received subpoenas from prosecutors seeking information about some of the students involved in the fraud case. Although the prep schools are not targets of the investigation, prosecutors want to know whether any parents or others accused in the case sought or received help from the schools, sources told The Times.

FULL COVERAGE: Dozens charged in connection with college admissions scheme »

It remains unclear how many parents took part in the college admissions scam.

The scheme, which began in 2011, centered on a Newport Beach college placement firm run by William “Rick” Singer. Wealthy parents are accused of paying Singer to help their children cheat on college entrance exams and to falsify athletic records of students to enable them to secure admission to elite schools, including UCLA, USC, Stanford, Yale and Georgetown, court records show.

Prosecutors allege that Singer instructed parents to donate funds to a fake charity he had established as part of the scheme. Most of the parents paid at least $200,000, but some spent up to $6.5 million to guarantee their children admission to top universities, authorities said. Parents were then able to deduct the donation from their income taxes, according to the Internal Revenue Service.

The scheme itself was fairly simple, prosecutors said: Singer instructed parents to seek extended time for their children on ACT and SAT exams. In at least one instance, a student claimed to have a learning disability to obtain medical documentation required by the College Board and ACT Inc. to grant additional time on the tests, according to court documents.

College admissions scammers found 'the hole in the Death Star'

MAR 19, 2019 | 6:25 AM

Court documents said Singer had more than 700 clients.

But it is believed that a much smaller group of very wealthy parents took part in the scheme. Some parents interviewed by The Times said they used Singer's firm for typical college placement services and had nothing to do with bribes.

A key tip that led to what authorities describe as the largest-ever college admissions cheating scandal came from a Los Angeles parent who was under investigation in an unrelated securities case, according to a law enforcement source.

According to court papers, the scam unraveled last year when one of Singer's coaches decided to go off on his own and work directly with a parent.

Rudy Meredith, Yale's women's soccer coach for more than two decades, had previously helped Singer fake the soccer credentials of a child of a Singer client. But in spring 2018, he solicited a bribe directly from the father of a second Yale applicant, whom the Department of Justice designated as "Yale Applicant 2."

What the coach did not know was that the parent took the proposal to federal prosecutors because the parent was already charged in a stock fraud and was looking to cut a deal, according to the court papers.

The source could not confirm whether the father of "Yale Applicant 2" was the L.A. parent.

A source familiar with the prosecution who was not authorized to discuss the investigation and requested anonymity said subpoenas have been served to potential witnesses who worked with Singer, requiring them to appear in Boston next month, but their attorneys are negotiating with prosecutors and agents in Los Angeles.

The moves come as many of the defendants are set to appear in a Boston court later this month.

Actresses Lori Loughlin and Felicity Huffman have hired big-name law firms to represent them in the college admissions cheating scandal.

Huffman was initially represented by top Hollywood criminal defense attorney, Blair Berk, but because the case is in Boston, she will be defended by Marty Murphy of Foley Hoag, while Loughlin is represented by Perry Viscounty of Latham & Watkins.

Former Assistant U.S. Atty. Neema Rahmani of West Coast Trial Lawyers said prosecutors can use their leverage in cases such as the college admissions scandal.

“Almost everyone in these cases cuts a deal and cooperates,” he said. “There is a lot of pressure on the parents to accept responsibility, cooperate and plead guilty. Otherwise, they may be held responsible for the entire amount of the fraud and corresponding prison time under ... the conspiracy charges.

“The government has a lot of leverage here, and I expect most or all of the parents to enter into agreements for lesser offenses and/or fraud amounts,” Rahmani said. “You usually flip the lesser players for the kingpin, and it is unusual here the investigation was done the opposite way.”

Some attorneys, however, have cast doubt about the government’s ability to show who was harmed in the far-reaching scheme.

“It’s not clear that these students would have been rejected had the parents not paid bribes. Would their scores have disqualified them? There’s no way to know that or to establish that other students would have been given their spots,” said Lara Yeretsian, a defense lawyer who has worked on other celebrity cases.

“The parents have already paid the ultimate price. They’ve lost their reputations and their standing in the community. One will likely be disbarred. How much more should they be punished? Most of them could make a good case that they were entrapped.”

---

Essential California Newsletter

Monday - Saturday

A roundup of the stories shaping California.

ENTER YOUR EMAIL ADDRESS

---

Richard Winton

---

Richard Winton is a crime writer for the Los Angeles Times and part of the team that won the Pulitzer Prize for Public Service in 2011. Known as @lacrimas on Twitter, during 20 years at The Times he also has been part of the breaking news staff that won Pulitzers in 1998 and 2004. He won the ASNE Deadline News award in 2006. A native of England, after getting degrees from University of Kent at Canterbury and University of Wisconsin-Madison, he began covering politics but chose a life of crime because it was less dirty.

---

COMMENTS (50)

---

MOST READ

---

BUSINESS

A pilot who hitched a ride on a Lion Air 737 saved that plane. The next day, the same Boeing jet crashed

MAR 19, 2019

---

COLUMN

How one of the most noticeable Lakers season-ticket holders is happy with the team missing the playoffs

MAR 20, 2019

---

L.A. NOW

Wealthy parents in admissions scandal under intense pressure to make deals. Here's why

MAR 20, 2019

---

MUST READS

No soccer experience, but she still got a spot on elite UCLA team in college admissions scandal

MAR 20, 2019

---

COMPANY TOWN

Disney-Fox deal is complete; CEO Bob Iger's big swing could change media industry

MAR 19, 2019

---

LATEST L.A. NOW

---

No. a meteor did not just crash in downtown Los Angeles

3h

---

Officials warn of measles exposure at LAX — again

3h

---

Snowboarder dies in fall near Mammoth ski resort

4h

---

Body of missing 5-year-old girl found in Stanislaus River

5h

---

Police pursuit ends in El Segundo after officers attempt traffic stop

MAR 20, 2019

Sign up for our newsletters
Subscribe for unlimited access

About/Contact

Archives

Classifieds

Terms

Site map

Advertising

Corrections

Privacy policy

L.A. Times careers

Find a job

Shop

